Legorne, June 12. Yesterday very early in the morning, appeared in sight of this Port, to the Westward, Six Ships, which were generally believed to be the Dutch Convoy from Cadiz, though afterwards the French Consul here, took them to be French men of War, and in that confidence went off in his Boat, (accompanied with 4 or 5 other persons, and the Officers of Health of this place) to Salute the Commander in Chief, but when they came near those Ships, they discovered their mistake, and that they were the Admiral and Vice-Admiral of Algiers, and four more of their Pyrats, but being engaged too far to avoid them, they were forced to go on board them. All this while, these Pyrats having the Wind from the Shore, seemed to intend hither; some hours after, they espied two Ships to the Eastward, which proved to be the Turky Frigat, bound from Alexandria to Messina (where she had discharged good part of her Lading) and from thence hither; and the Dauby, laden with Rice at Venice, and bound for Amsterdam, who seeing the said Ships, as it were, coming out of this Road, with French Colours, had so little suspition of them that,
